The Essentials of Writing an Exceptional Cover Letter

To put it simply, a cover letter is meant to highlight your achievements, skills and experiences within a golden standard of one page. The primary goal of a cover letter is to “win over” the hiring personnel through your writing. How you write your cover letter can help you convince employers why you are the best choice for the position.

1. Tailor your cover letter to the needs of the organization.

The more you relate your own experiences with what you can “bring to the table,” the more you will appeal to employers.

2. Attach your resume.

Make sure it’s current and includes the most relevant experience related to the position you’re applying for.

3. Address your letter to the hiring manager.

This strategy will help your cover letter be more professional. If you can’t find the hiring manager’s name on the company website, the company name may also be used.

4. Keep your introduction concise.

This section should include the name of the position you’re applying for and how you found the job advertisement.

5. Explain why you are interested in the position.

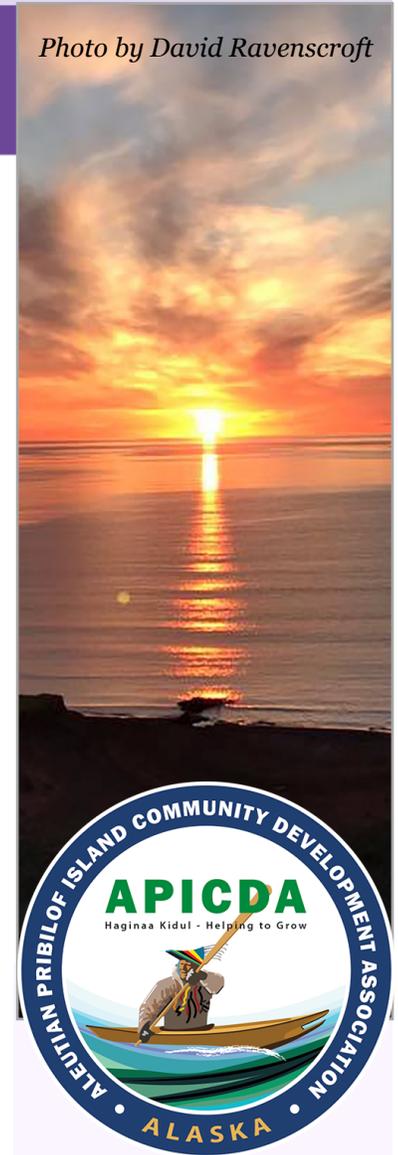

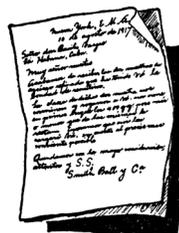

Your employer will most likely want to know your reasons for seeking out this job.

6. Advertise your contact information.

Make it well known to your employer that you are eager to interview by including sufficient contact information and your availability.

Student Spotlight — Bobbie McNeley

Bobbie McNeley is from the community of Nelson Lagoon and recently began her final semester of college.

APICDA would like to recognize Bobbie for all her astounding accomplishments throughout her undergraduate college experience. Here are some facts and tips from Bobbie to current college students:

Why did you decide to go to college and what did you study?

I decided to go to college because I am very interested in Alaska Native law and tribal affairs; there is very little taught about in public K-12 schools. Because of this, I am majoring in Alaska Native Studies with a concentration in Alaska Native Law, Government and Politics. I am also receiving another degree in Tribal Management.

Are you involved with a club, organization, etc.? If so, how is that extracurricular activity going to help you in school and your career?

I am not involved in a club directly related to law, but I am on the Unangam Tunuu Revitalization Committee. We oversee the revitalization program efforts and help maintain progress towards the project's goals. I have been able to work with the Aleut International Association and the Arctic Youth Ambassadors to discuss issues and activities that are important to the Aleut people, but are also of importance to the Arctic.

What have you learned from other students?

Every student is different, and we all have our own capacity to do things. I think the most important thing that I have learned from other students is to work at your own pace. Do not try to compare yourself to others because that will set you up for failure. You are on your own path, do not try to follow someone else's.

Where is your favorite study spot?

The 24-hour study room on the UAF campus is by far the best study spot. It is open 24/7 and it's very nice to be able to have that late night spot to study. I do best sitting at a desk with a good bright light and a lot of space to have my paperwork and books out.

What do you do to prepare for a test?

When studying for a test, I usually like to have all my materials printed off so that I can highlight and put sticky notes all over my materials. I also will listen to music so I do not get distracted by what is going on around me.

What are three things you have with you at all times as a student?

My phone, a pen and snacks. I have all of my emails signed into my phone, my notes at the ready, and I think that staying fueled up helps me retain information.

What advice do you have for new college students?

Get out of your comfort zone, even if it's the slightest bit. Go to that club fair, apply to that international academy, try out that Zumba class or check out that open mic night. If you do not know what you want to do with your college career, maybe one of the extracurricular activities can help guide you. Sometimes, you also just need a break from your dorm room.

Safety Tips from Sean Hislop, Safety Manager

With spring and summer approaching, it will soon be time to enjoy the outdoors. Hiking is a fantastic way to see Alaska. Trails range from short and mostly level to ones that climb in elevation and/or take multiple days to complete.

Do some research so you're familiar with the terrain and any parking fees—you don't want to return to your car and find a ticket. Most importantly, hiking in Alaska can be dangerous if you aren't prepared.

Here are some do's and don'ts:

Don't try a hike that exceeds your physical abilities. Do expect the weather to change and dress appropriately; dress in layers so if you are hot you can remove clothing. Don't hike alone! Go with at least one other person that you can talk with to help keep bears away. Do carry bear spray and know how to use it. Tell someone where you're going and when you should be back. There are some things you should take with you, but those items greatly depend on where you're going and how long you'll be gone. Here's a small list of recommended items to take for a day hike:

- Good broken-in hiking boots or shoes.
- Small, light-weight backpack.
- Water (amount varies by person).
- Sturdy knife (fixed blade, 6-9-inches, with a sheath that can attach to a belt, for example).

- Small first aid kit: band-aid's, moleskin (for blisters), gauze pads, medical tape, antiseptic wipes, hand sanitizer.
- Light-weight rain gear.
- Snacks (trail mix, granola or protein bars).
- Belt (to attach knife and bear spray).
- Bear spray.
- Fully-charged cell phone.
- Insect repellent.
- Fire starter (flint and steel, lighter, matches).

If you're looking for a specific trail or want a long hike, visit one of these websites. They can help with where to hike, what to wear and more. Take pictures, be safe, and enjoy hiking!

Free College Tuition for Alaska Natives

Recently, Ilisagvik College, the only tribal college in Alaska, began offering free tuition for all Alaska Natives over the age of 18. Even better - prospective students can choose where to earn college credits! Students who want a change of scenery, but still want to be in a small community, can live on campus in Barrow. Students unable to be on campus or who don't want to leave their communities, don't have to! All that's required is a good internet connection to take classes via distance learning right in the comfort of their own homes.

How much does free tuition save Ilisagvik College students per year? The cost of each college credit is $145, so full-time students save nearly $3,500 per year on tuition. That's more than enough money to buy two round-trip tickets from Anchorage to New York! Another benefit is the faculty-to-student ratio, which is greater than most large universities, meaning that students get more one-on-one time if they have questions or need help. Janelle Everett, director of recruitment at Ilisagvik College, says, "... we're able to help them [students] a little bit more. We want to help them succeed."

Another great aspect of Ilisagvik College is, because it's a tribal college, it's a place where Alaska Native cultures from across the state come to merge. It's often easier to make friends when some type of connection already exists, so the cultural abundance and variety at Ilisagvik College increases the likelihood that Alaska Native students will connect with each other.

With rising costs of living and a competitive job market in rural areas, it's important for Alaska Native students to go to college, or any post-secondary educational institution, and earn degrees or certificates so they can continue living and thriving in the communities they are from.

To apply to or receive more information about Ilisagvik College, go to their website <https://www.ilisagvik.edu/> or call (907) 852-3333 or (800) 478-7337 (toll-free), or send a message on the contact page of the website: <https://www.ilisagvik.edu/contact-us/>.
